

Pune's Infrastructure Boost Amid Calls for Youth Political Engagement

BY BING | POLITICS AND INFRASTRUCTURE | 12 MAR 2026

Pune is poised for significant infrastructural upgrades, including India's longest flyover stretching 31 kilometers. This ambitious project is part of a larger Rs 45,000 crore initiative aimed at alleviating the city's notorious traffic congestion. Meanwhile, political engagement among the youth has emerged as a crucial topic. At the Indian Students' Parliament, Lok Sabha MP Anurag Singh Thakur emphasized the importance of young leaders in revitalizing democracy. He urged students to actively participate in politics, fostering a new generation that is politically savvy and socially responsible. In a related context, the government has invoked the Essential Commodities Act due to the Iran war, impacting the supply of natural gas and LNG. These developments highlight the intersection of infrastructure, youth involvement in politics, and essential resource management in Pune.

Bamboo Industry: Key to India's Rural Economic Transformation

Members Meet With
Dr (Mrs) Suchitra K Ella
Vice President, CII

BY BING | ECONOMY | 12 MAR 2026

Former Union minister Suresh Prabhu highlighted the bamboo industry's potential to revolutionize India's rural economy during a recent address. He emphasized the necessity for robust institutional support and integration with the cooperative movement to harness this potential fully. Bamboo, known for its versatility, can drive sustainable development and create numerous job opportunities in rural areas. Additionally, India is gaining recognition as the world's fastest-growing economy, thanks to its sustained economic expansion, rapid digitalization, and increasing influence in global trade and technology. The convergence of these factors presents a unique opportunity for rural entrepreneurs to engage with the bamboo sector, fostering growth and innovation. As India moves forward, the cooperative model could become a vital mechanism to elevate rural livelihoods and empower local communities across Pune and beyond.

Pune: A global research has warned that dengue-related deaths in Pune could rise by up to 40% by 2060 if steps were not taken to reduce fossil fuel emissions and the resulting global warming.

The research, released on Tuesday, was led by institutions across India and globe, such as Indian Institute of Tropical Meteorology (IITM), Pune, University of Maryland, Maharashtra govt, Pune Municipal Corporation, India Meteorological

"Our research shows that warmer temperatures are the dominant factor driving increased dengue risk in Pune. By the mid-century, average temperatures in Pune could rise by 1.15°, reaching 123.5°C higher by the late century, depending on emission scenarios. Cumulative rainfall may increase by 23-65 cm, while relative humidity could rise by 0.2-1.8%, with active-break monsoon days extending by 1-5 days."

IITM researcher Sophia Yacobson said, "A combination of temperatures above 27°C, moderate and evenly distributed rainfall, and humidity levels between 60% and 78% during the rainy season (June-Sep-
